Topic: Acute Cholangitis in Pregnancy: How Safe is ERCP??

Abstract:

The occurrence of acute cholangitis (choledocholithiasis) is rare during pregnancy. Choledocholithiasis in pregnancy is uncommon and seen in approximately one in 1200 deliveries. It represents less than 7% of causes of jaundice in pregnant women. Pregnancy is regarded as an important risk factor for gallstone disease, with data suggesting that hyperestrogenemia contributes to the saturation of bile and increasing gallbladder volume resulting in increased biliary sludge and gallstones. However only 1.2% of patients with Gall bladder sludge or stone developed symptoms attributable to gallstone disease.

Acute cholangitis is a medical-surgical emergency that can threaten the vital prognosis of both mother and fetus, because of multivisceral complications i.e Jaundice, cholangitis & pancreatitis. Clinical presentation is variable, ranging from simple pain in right hypochondrium to septic shock. Medical imaging may be helpful to make diagnosis, in combination with other clinical and biological findings.

We present a rare case of symptomatic choledocholithiasis in a pregnant patient who presented as a surgical emergency. She underwent imaging with USG and MRCP and then had a therapeutic endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP) at HIMS.
