Presenters: Dr. Priya Singh, Senior resident, (D.M., Department of Neurology)

Abstract:

Moebius syndrome (MBS) is a rare, congenital condition characterized by a disorder of the cranial nerves involved in the control of the muscles of the face and eyes, leading to several orofacial and ocular defects, along with associated limb abnormalities. Other cranial neuropathies, particularly involving CN V, IX, X, and XII. Issues originating due to other cranial nerve palsies can further create problems related to deglutition and breathing as a result of palatopharyngeal dysfunction, inadequate cough reflex, glottic spasm, and laryngeal paralysis. The diagnosis of Moebius syndrome is made mostly on the basis of clinical criteria. Although genetic testing exists, it is expensive and not accessible, following the exclusion of syndromes with similar clinical manifestations.
