A Continuing Nursing Education session titled “Finding the Right Journal for Publication” was conducted for faculty members by Dr. Rajkumari Sylvia Devi, moderated by Dr. Sanchita Pugazhendi, focusing on enhancing research publication skills and navigating credible journal selection. The session highlighted the importance of publishing in peer-reviewed journals to advance scientific knowledge and professional development. A key component of the session was learning how to identify indexed journals in Elsevier (Scopus) and Web of Science, including verifying indexing status, checking journal scope and aims, assessing impact factors and citation metrics, reviewing author guidelines, and ensuring publisher credibility to avoid predatory journals. Faculty members were also guided on using these databases to match their manuscript topics with appropriate journals, understanding review timelines, and evaluating journal quartiles and ranking metrics. The interactive session allowed participants to clarify doubts regarding manuscript preparation, submission processes, and ethical publishing practices. Overall, the program equipped faculty members with practical knowledge to select reputable journals, enhance research visibility, and ensure the successful publication of research work.
